From the Pastor...

My dear brothers and sisters in Christ,

The Prophet Ezekiel says, "If I tell the wicked, 'O wicked one, you shall surely die,' and you do not speak out to dissuade the wicked from his way, the wicked shall die for his guilt, but I will hold you responsible for his death." In Matthew's gospel, Jesus says, "If your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault." In both of these passages the Lord is teaching us about Fraternal Correction. Pope Francis commenting on this gospel passage even says, "I must correct another Christian when he does what is not good." This is not a pleasant thing to do and most often times there will be a backlash from those who do not want to hear it. Fraternal Correction should always be done in a loving and charitable way. However, when bishops or priests speak the truth on aspects of our faith, inevitably there are some who get offended and will criticize us. They lash out at the messenger because they don't like the message. The Truth remains the Truth no matter how an individual feels about it. Our Responsorial Psalm this weekend proclaims, "If today you hear his voice, harden not your hearts." I pray for those who struggle with the Truth, but I also take very seriously the Lord's words in Ezekiel to those who are to speak at the Lord's request, "I will hold you responsible for his death" if you do not speak out. May each of our hearts remain tender in the Lord and receive Fraternal Correction with a spirit of gratitude for the sake of our salvation.

Fatima, the fourth apparition, the Ordeal (continued) - Soon, they heard steps outside. A guard entered, looking at the children, he barked, "Come with me." Again they were taken to the County House and put through the third degree. Jacinta was called in first, "The oil is already boiling. Tell the secret... otherwise..." Jacinta, like Our Lord before the judges, remained silent. "Take her away and throw her into the tank!" yelled the inquisitor. The guard grabbed her arm, swung her around and locked her in another room. Outside the Magistrate's office, while waiting their turn, Francisco confided to Lucia, "If they kill us, we shall soon be in Heaven. Nothing else counts. I hope that Jacinta does not get scared. I should say a Hail Mary for her." He took off his cap and said a prayer. The guard, watching the children, was puzzled at the boy's behavior. "What are you saying?" he demanded. "I am saying one Hail Mary for Jacinta, to give her courage." The other guard came back, and led Francisco into the Magistrate's office. Grabbing hold of the boy, he shouted, "Spit out the secret. The other one is already burned up; now it's your turn. Go ahead, out with it." "I can't," he replied, looking calmly into the eyes of this new Nero. "I can't tell it to anyone." "You say you can't. That's your business. Take him away. He'll share his sister's lot." The boy was taken into the next room, where he found Jacinta, safe and happy. Lucia was convinced that they had been killed and thinking that she was next to be thrown into the burning cauldron of oil, she trusted in her heavenly Mother not to desert her, but to give her the courage to be loyal and courageous, even as Francisco and Jacinta were. Though Lucia did tell the Magistrate something of what happened in the visions, even as she had told her parents and the Pastor, she kept the secret part to herself. It was a solemn promise to Our Lady and she would rather die than break it. The Magistrate was not satisfied with this little bit. He wanted to know the secret. After her inquisition, Lucia too was locked in the room where the other two were and how happy they were for their unwavering fidelity to Our Lady. The Magistrate did not yet give up. The guard came in to remind them that soon they would be thrown into the burning oil. The thought of being able to die together for Our Lady made them all the happier. The Magistrate finally admitted, after further fruitless questioning, that he could accomplish nothing. Then out of fear of what the enraged people might do, he himself took them in his carriage to Fatima, hardly realizing that the Church was celebrating on that day the Feast of the Assumption.

"The Truth
 remains the Truth
 no matter how an individual feels about it."

In Christ, Fr. Dan
